HIGH COST, PERFORMANCE ISSUES

Telcos flag hurdles to open RAN adoption

JATIN GROVER
New Delhi, February 26

EVEN AS TELECOM operators in the country have been testing open radio access network (RAN) technology for some years now, they have flagged factors like higher cost, issues in performance and no clarity over service support among key reasons that are restricting the commercial deployment of technology. This assumes significance in the sense that open RAN technology, which was expected to reduce the cost for network deployment by about 30% for telcos, instead has shown an over two-times increase in the cost compared to current traditional RAN solutions, executives said.

RAN constitutes a major portion of the capital expenditure (capex) of telecom operators. Open RAN is a new way of connecting mobile devices to the core network. Instead of using equipment from just one company like in the case of traditional radio access networks, open technology lets service providers mix and match pieces from different companies, thereby reducing dependence on a few vendors. Globally, US telecom operator AT&T is expected to spend roughly $14 billion over the next five years to deploy the open RAN technology. The company has partnered with Ericsson to deploy 70% of its wireless network traffic across open-capable platforms by 2026. In India, however, the technology could see headway only with the launch of 6G, which is expected to happen by 2030. "We have been doing the trials for the last two-three years, but we have never reached a level where we can say that we can deploy it commercially," Jagbir Singh, chief technology officer at Vodafone Idea, said during an industry event last week. According to Singh, even during the discussions on commercial deployment of open RAN technology, the price is coming out to be more expensive than traditional RAN. "From an operators' point of view, why should I deploy a product which is not stable and which is expensive," Singh said. Lately, unavailability of chipset vendors, other proven software developers and suppliers and limited interest from companies like Nokia, Ericsson and others is hindering the uptake of open RAN, experts said. Further, interoperability of open RAN technology as well as security issues within the network are some of the factors that are being considered before the deployment of technology. Last week, Vodafone Idea said it started a pilot deployment of commercial Open RAN technology in collaboration with Mavenir, a provider of open radio access network technology. The company said that Mavenir is in the advanced commercial phase of deployment of technology. Bharti Airtel has also looped in Mavenir to conduct trials. "We have to get the equation of cost and performance right. Second is, what we are seeing is that Open RAN is actually evolving fast but the technology still lacks full-feature parity compared to traditional systems," said Saurabh Mittal, vice president and head, standards & technology at Bharti Airtel. "With too many components and players involved in open RAN, there is a concern about who will be responsible if something goes wrong and how will we debug the problem," Mittal said. According to industry experts, open RAN technology has missed both the 4G and 5G windows, as most of the deployment has happened. If all the issues are resolved, there will be a business opportunity from Vodafone Idea, which is yet to deploy 5G, experts said. Reliance Jio has developed its own end-to-end 5G stack and said its radios are compliant to open RAN.

JAGBIR SINGH, CTO, Vodafone Idea FROM AN OPERATORS' POINT OF VIEW, WHY SHOULD I DEPLOY A PRODUCT WHICH IS EXPENSIVE AND ISN'T STABLE

Auto industry to grow over 6x by 2047: Kalyani

GEETA NAIR
Pune, February 26

THE INDIAN AUTOMOTIVE industry will grow six to seven-fold from the current four million vehicles per year by 2047, Baba Kalyani, chairman and managing director, Bharat Forge, said on Monday. "It took 75 years to go from zero to four million units, and in 25 years we will go from four million to 25-30 million units. That is the kind of growth the automotive industry will see," Kalyani said. He was speaking at a fireside chat with Ravi Pandit, chairman, KPIT Technologies, at the Pune International Business Summit organised by the Maharashtra Chamber of Commerce, Industries and Agriculture. Today, the country's automotive industry is "a follower and not a leader", with 70% of the sector dependent on foreign technology. But this will change, and 80% of the automotive industry will become Indian, he said. The only concern is energy, with India's needs rising 3x in the next 25 years, he said. The

Baba Kalyani, chairman & MD, Bharat Forge, believes 100% of the auto sector won't go electric country is unlikely to achieve the target of 20 GW of renewable energy by 2026, with current capacity less than 11 GW. For this, India needs to stop relying on imports from China. While EVs are the flavour of the day, Kalyani said he didn't see ICE engines dying and all of the world going electric. Bharat Forge is targeting to bring in 'lights-out manufacturing' at its Pune plant by 2026. This would mean a fully automated production system. "We can't run tomorrow's factory unless you make it fully digital," he said.

birds. It has rehabilitated key species such as rhinos, leopards and crocodiles. Spread over 3,000 acres, the project is housed within the green belt of RIL's Jamnagar Refinery Complex in Gujarat. "What started as a passion for me at a very young age has become a mission now, with Vantara and our brilliant and committed team. We are focused on protecting critically-endangered species native to India.
